

“All right, an interview!” Trevor Musser exclaimed as he exited the door of his Latin class.

Musser, an incredibly friendly and an all around creative guy, has been in several drama productions and even played guitar and sang for the library’s Reading Cafe last year.

He states the most fulfilling and creative thing he’s done in the last few years, by choice, is the Napoleon Dynamite dance he performed at the Talent Show.

Although Musser had to think for a bit in order to identify his most fulfilling and creative activity, he picked his favorite food more quickly. “I love bacon cheeseburgers!” Musser exclaims.

Musser’s favorite online venue is tried-and-true YouTube, especially the channel “Film Riot”, which publishes videos about filmmaking and special effects, two areas that interest Musser.

Musser was encouraged when recently retired band director, Mr. Rupert, told him to “always strive to be the best you can be.”

Musser reports that Mr. Rupert told him many inspiring and uplifting things over the past years, but that one statement was something he really took to heart.

Musser also participates in Drama club, and he had many positive things to say about it. “Drama club is tons of fun, the productions are tons of fun, and the people in it are amazing.”

He describes the community of Drama Club as being like a family, and he reports that drama helped him push himself to a creative limit, by acting out parts he never would have thought he could portray.

He says that while he’s not performing in the winter production this year, he definitely hopes to be involved in the spring play.

That will certainly be something for SMH student to look forward to, as his performances as both Laurie in “Little Women” and Trevor in “A Music Review” last year were compelling.

Musser will be playing in this year’s Teen Read Week Reading Café next Thursday, Oct. 22.
